BY GUS MALBERT.

Just as we were leaving the ballyard and Joe Heusler was pulling the curtains they were arguing how it could possibly have happene Richmond lost a ball game without an apparent effort; lost it Norfolk by a score of 4 to 2, yet it was done so deftly, with so mu finesse, that those of us who actually stood by and were in at the killing are still drawing diagrams and attempting to work out the problem. Though unfortunate, it is nevertheless true that no satisfactory solution has yet been reached.

Pushing it over just as it happened. Richmond scored two real runs, both earned. Norfolk scored four runs, none of which were earned, but all four of which count. Illuminating this statement is the announcement that Richmond made five horrible foozles, all of which helped the adversaries, while the lonesome miscue of the invaders failed to enter into the argument, so you could notice it. James Vance deserved far better treatment than he received from his friends and helpmates. He pitched a real and regular ball game, and until Connie Bresnahan and Doc Newton got mixed up with a couple of ground balls batted at them, had not been

The injury to Piez added the finishing touch to an already demoralized

IN CLOSE GAME

Hedgpeth and Gardin Both Pitch Good Ball, but Roanoke Finally Triumphs.

Connie Bresnahan and Doe Newton got mixed up with a couple of ground balls batted at them, had not been scored upon.

The Colts leaped the barrier in their part of the second, it matters not that two had been retired, since following that happening came a knock by Charley Piez, after which he pilfered second, all of which was, in turn, followed by a two-base clout by Connie Bresnahan. This scored Piez That one run was the only thing the Colts were able to accomplish until the ninth, when the second check was niched.

Piez was rather badly injured in the fifth, and will be out of the lineup for several days. Not satisfied that those three runs would be enough, the Griffmen gave the visitors still another in the sixth. Staub again was treated kindly by Bresnahan, who threw his chance to right feld, allowing Blausser, who had beat his infield roller, to score, and Staub to walk to third.

An abortive rally was made by Richmond in the ninth. Laval and Griffm each hit doubles, which shot Bill homeward. Joe Kircher then yanked his portpaw, Weeder, and sent by walking Raley. Ayers and Griffin To-Day

In an effort to break the hoodoo that has hovered over the Colts throughout all of the double-headers played this season, Manager Steve Griffin will send Doc Ayers after the first game with the Tars, which begins at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, while Harry Griffin will be asked to bring home the second. Jay Rogers is slated to catch both games.

The injury to Piez means that Carter will play left field. Strain would be Griff's selection, but that he may have to use Charley in one of the games as a relief pitcher, and he can't afford to take a chance in wearing out the youngster.

The injury to Piez, while severe, will not keep him out longer than Monday or Tuesday. He strained his knee oversliding second base, and was really more apprehensive than the injury warranted. It is more painful than serious, is the opinion expressed by the physicians.

Fortunately, Petersburg lost to Roanoke yesterday, and we are still tied for second place. By the same token the Tigers gained a full game on both Goobers and Colts, and are now very much in the race. The hike toward the pennant is fast becoming one of the most interesting in the Virginia League, with Roanoke, Richmond and Petersburg setting the pace.

Indeed, the Canadian might have won the set through this unexpected spurt had not the luck broken against him in the crisis. In the next two games Williams was exceptionally favored and won both. Schwengers appeared to lose heart after this. He did not respond thereafter with the determination which characterized his plucky After Williams, playing a fine game, tion which characterized his plucky fight in the first set.

Williams won the second set in rather handy fashion. He was in rare games to four, winning from Mc-Loughlin's terrific service. Through overanxiety, however, he lost the next game, and though he braced up later, he lost the first set, and with it a fine chance for the match.

The plucky Canadian did not lose heart in the second match, and played with every ounce of his skill and power. McLoughlin was simply too good for him. The match was much closer than the figures (6-1) indicate. In the last set Fowell led by three games to one, winning the American's service, but lost the following game. Through his missing this great chance McLough lin was able to square it at three all. Though Powell again forged ahead by four to three, McLoughlin came back and won three straight games, the set and the match.

To-day's victories in both the singles gives the United States a very decided advantage in the finals. A victory for the Americans in to-morrow's doubles would clinch their right to challenge the English champions. It is believed that America will score more easily in the doubles than in the singles. In case of a reverse, which is hardly be-lievable. America would have to win but one of the two remaining singles to clinch the right of challenge.

It is believed here that McLoughlin is some day to become the world's champion tennis player if he continues in the game and improves his present form as he should with experience. He is undoubtedly a wonderful player, though he made many mistakes today. He was just slightly above Pow-ell's class all the time,

Williams won the second set in rather handy fashion. He was in rare form. His driving on the forehand was extremely powerful. Schwengers was somewhat shaky on his back-hand, undercutting the ball too much. In the last set Williams started with the service.

He led right through on his service, Schwengers equalizing when it came his turn to serve. In the last game, however, Schwengers was not on his service, and gave away the set by serving a double fault. There is no doubt at all about a most brilliant lay a tennis future awaiting R. Norris Williams.

Meboughlin, in R. B. Powell, had a left-handed player with whom to deal. This variety does not seem to suit the American, who was inclined to disregard the strength or weakness of his opponent's back hand. Powell made a very plucky light, but was beaten three straight sets. Powell led at five games to four, winning from Mc-Loughlin's terrific service. Captain of Giants Helps Beerville Takes Up Burden in Tenth, and Holds Browns Scoreless

New York, July 18.—Again to-day the lowly Cardinals upset the dopesters by breaking even with the Glants. The visitors won the first game 4 to 3 through the poor fielding of the league leaders, and lost the second 5 to 0 through their inability to hit Mathewson. Until the eighth inning Matty allowed but a single hit, credited to Wingo.

Larry Doyle was the principal offender in the initial contest, his errors in the second and seventh innings paying the way for the four runs of the Cardinals. An eighth-inning rally failed to overcome this lead. The second game was a foregone conclusion after the first couple of innings. The score:

WANTS TO FIGHT

Arrival of "Tar Baby" Brings Exodus of All "White Hope" Fraternity.

San Francisco, July 18.—Samuel Langford, the Boston "Tar Baby," came here off the Pacific Mail liner Sonoma at 8 oclock this morning. A quarter of an hour later there was not a member of the "white hope" family to be found this side of Goat Island.

It may merely be a coincidence that Arthur Pelky, claiming the heavy-weight title, should draw the color line at the time when Black Sammy was sailing into the waters of the Golden Gate, but the big town sports are smiling after the manner of men who know. The general impression appears that should Pelky mix with the Boston darkey the Canucks exit (Continued on Seventh Page.)
